Mount Sinai Hospital, In N.Y., To Establish $30 Million Medical School On Present Site

Mount Sinai Hospital, in New York, announced that it would establish a $30,000,000 medical school on its present site. The first class will be admitted in September, 1968.

A charter authorizing the hospital to set up the school was granted by the State Board of Regents. A team sent by the Liaison Committee on Medical Education of the Association of American Medical Colleges and the Council on Medical Education and Hospitals of the American Medical Association had examined the plan, says William Lissner, of the New York Times, and concluded "we can expect the development of a medical school with excellent academic standards."

Gustave L. Levy, president of the hospital, said the medical school would have a four-year program accommodating an eventual enrollment of 400 students.

The school would graduate about 100 physicians a year, Mr. Levy said. Existing medical schools in the state graduate about 950 physicians a year. Thus the new school would increase the state's output of physicians by 10 per cent, helping to meet the need for more medical graduates that was pointed out in recent city and state surveys.

The hospital is negotiating with three universities for a university affiliation. Its plans call for the medical school to function as part of an existing university, either in the city or elsewhere.

The school will be built on 250,000 square feet within the present Mount [illegible]. The complex is [illegible] Madison Avenue.

The school's central complex which will cost the $30,000,000 approved for the first phase of its development, will consist of five buildings.

These include a basic science building, a clinical science building, student laboratories, an ambulatory-care facility, and a student dormitory. Parking facilities will also be built. Faculty lounges and offices and a medical school library will also be included in the five buildings. Faculty housing will be in nearby apartments.

For the most part the new buildings will replace old structures whose activities have been or are being transferred to recently completed buildings, says the New York Times. School buildings will be integrated with the existing buildings.

Mount Sinai now has 21 buildings, which have 1,258 beds and a variety of services through which some 140,000 patients are treated a year. Six of the present buildings will be razed to provide sites for four of the new buildings.

Mr. Levy said the medical school would aim to transform the existing hospital, a teaching and research hospital, into a Biomedical Center. The center would also embrace a Graduate School for Human Studies, a Graduate School for the Biological Sciences and an Institute for Environmental Medicine, including space, radiation and behavioral medicine.

Mr. Levy said that the establishment of the medical school was "a natural extension of the hospital's dedication to the best use of its energies and resources for the advancement of community health."

Besides helping to reduce the shortage of physicians, he said, the medical school would expose the house staff of more than 200 interns, residents, and fellows to the scientific and intellectual stimulation of a university-oriented training center. The school would also develop paramedical scientists, he said, and train them in the life sciences for a bigger role in patient care, teaching, and research, and develop the kind of physician most useful to society as it will exist in the future.

[illegible] developed by Mount Sinai's joint committee on medical school planning. Milton Steinbach, a trustee, is chairman. Dr. Hans Popper, director of pathology, is the ranking physician on the committee and acting dean, says the New York Times. Dr. Martin R. Steinberg, hospital director, was active in an ex-officio capacity.

The hospital was founded in 1852. It has an operating budget of $20,000,000 a year and an education and research budget of $4,000,000 a year.

U.S. Reform Jews Open Campus In Israel

The Hebrew Union College's School, the fourth and newest campus of the parent institution in the United States, opened at Jerusalem. The ranking guest present was the former Premier David Ben-Gurion, whose presence at a new center associated with Biblical and Archeological Reform Judaism provoked a scolding editorial from the Israeli newspaper that speaks for the Conservative National Religious party.

Started six years ago and completed at the cost of almost $1,000,000, the new school is intended to serve as a counterpart of the Israeli Sector of Jerusalem to the American School of Oriental Research in the Jordanian Sector, says the New York Times. Dr. Nelson Glueck, president of the Hebrew Union College-Jewish Institute of Religion, who was largely responsible for the Biblical and Archeological School, said that it answered needs posed by the division of Palestine between Arab and Jew.

The new school, the only permanent American academic institution of higher learning in Israel, will serve as a post-doctoral biblical and archeological research center for American and other universities. It will be opened to scholars of all faiths.

Although those connected with the new school have stressed its academic purposes, Conservative religious elements in Israel suspect that it will constitute a base for the extremely modest Reform movement in Israel.

Dr. Glueck said that the school's chapel would "not have a fixed permanent congregation of its own, or be directed at any particular segment of the Israeli population. But," he went on, "it is prepared to serve American and Israeli visitors who feel attracted to our kind of worship."

Former Premier Ben-Gurion said "I am not a Reform Jew, but I believe in one tenet common to all Jews — 'we are all responsible for each other'." Mr. Ben-Gurion eliminated from his prepared speech the phrase, "just as I am not Conservative."

"That means Jewish solidarity," he said in reference to the quotation, reports the New York Times. "This demands, in my opinion, mutual respect on the part of all Jews — Reform for Orthodox and Orthodox for Reform."

The Premier's view was not shared by Hatzofeh, the organ of the National Religious party, which is also a member of the Government coalition.

The newspaper declared: "The opening of the Reform temple in Jerusalem in the presence of the Prime Minister and other leading Government and public figures who have supported this project, is the climax in a chain in harmful activities carried out in Israel, activities which serve to divide and destroy, which are foreign to the spirit of the country and to its needs."

United States Ambassador Walworth Barbour announced a United States Government institutional development grant of $71,200. The grant will include funds for three research scholars for the coming academic year and for travel and partial support for 25 participants in this summer's seminar on Near Eastern civilization.

Designed by the Israeli architect, Heinz Rau, in rough Jerusalem stone, Galilee white limestone, and marble, the modern structure is on a hill looking toward the Old City of Jordan, says the New York Times. Hebrew Union's main college is in Cincinnati. It has other colleges in New York and Los Angeles.

Benefactor Was C.B.S. Board Member, Father Of Board Chairman

Samuel Paley, retired Philadelphia manufacturer and philanthropist, and a former member of the board of the Columbia Broadcasting System, died at Palm Beach, Florida, at his summer home. He was 87 years old and lived in the Philadelphia suburb of Chestnut Hill.

Born in Russia, Mr. Paley came to the United States as a boy. In 1896 he founded the Congress Cigar Company and served as its president until his retirement several years ago.

Mr. Paley was a member of the C.B.S. board from 1930 until 1960. His son, William S. Paley, is currently board chairman of C.B.S.

The elder Mr. Paley devoted much of his time to philanthropic activities. He recently donated a wing known as the Paley Clinic, to the Albert Einstein Medical Center of Philadelphia. Last year he established a workshop for retarded children in Lake Worth.

At his death, he was an honorary director of the Allied Jewish Appeal of Philadelphia; the Albert Einstein Medical Center in Philadelphia; and the Federation of Jewish Philanthropies in that city. He was a member of the Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts; the Penn Athletic Club; and the Palm Beach Country Club.

Mr. Paley was the founder of the Samuel Paley Lectureship on [illegible] at the Hebrew University in Jerusalem.

Surviving besides his son; are: his widow, the former Miss Goldie Drell; a daughter, Mrs. Blanche P. Levy; a brother, Benjamin; a sister, Mrs. John Prockter; six grandchildren; and three great-grandchildren.

Project Seeks Out Moral Heroes, Jews Or Non-Jews, Who Risked Their Lives To Rescue Hunted Jews

A rabbi described a project that he hopes will stimulate "greater acts of righteous behaviour." The rabbi, Harold N. Schulweis, is the founder and director of the Institute for the Righteous Acts, established recently at Oakland, Calif. It is devoted to collecting and documenting episodes in which Jews or non-Jews helped to rescue Jews in the Hitler period.

He founded the unit last September to provide an antidote for the negative image of man's character brought out by the atrocities recounted at the Eichmann trial, says the New York Herald Tribune. The Institute wants to document episodes of heroic rescue behavior by "righteous Gentiles" before they are blotted out by time, he said.

A scientific study will be made by a team headed by Dr. Perry London, aged 31 years, clinical psychologist from Stanford University, of the "altruistic personality" displayed by the rescuers. An advisory council, whose members include Episcopal Bishop James A. Pike, of California, and the Most Rev. Floyd L. Begin, Roman Catholic Bishop of Oakland, is helping to guide the research.

"We must testify to the acts of sacrifice of thousands of non-Jews who risked their lives to defend and protect the hunted and pursued of our people," Rabbi Schulweis said.

Already in hand, he said, are verified accounts of priests, ministers, and nuns, peasants, farmers, and storekeepers, who "jeopardized their lives and the lives of their families" to hide and rescue Jews.

They are people such as the two families who hid and protected the family of Anne Frank, or the Christian librarian who lied to authorities, to get into the Vilna ghetto and save hundreds of Jewish children.

Rabbi Schulweis, who is 38 years old, discussed the project in an interview with the New York Times at the closing session of the annual convention of the Rabbinical Assembly, the rabbinic arm of Conservative Judaism, at Greenfield Park, N.Y. He declared:

"The world is hungry for moral heroes, for it has seen strength in villains alone.

"The world needs heroes of flesh and blood, not saints; human heroes of our times and in our circumstance, not of an ancient period remote from us. The world needs heroes whose altruism is written out in action, models of exemplary behavior who realize our abstract ideals, human beings to be emulated."

The Institute's title derives from a Talmudic phrase; "The righteous of all people have a share in the world to come." The Talmud is a compendium of Jewish Law that serves as a guide for Jewish ritual and ethical behavior.

Rabbi Schulweis said the study of rescues in the Nazi era "confronts us with prima facie acts of altruism in the face of great risks." These heroic deeds, he said, should be examined. "Moral educators will be provided with knowledge of human behavior which can only help them in their efforts to cultivate the moral character of people," he said.

Rabbi Schulweis was born and reared in New York. He received his B.A. from Yeshiva College and an M.A. in philosophy from New York University, says the New York Times. He was ordained at the Jewish Theological Seminary of America and had been an instructor in philosophy at City College of New York.

THE RUSSIAN POET, YEVTUSHENKO, AND THE FATE OF JEWS IN THE SOVIET UNION

By Leon Shapiro, in the Anti-Defamation League Bulletin of Bnai Brith

Russians have always taken their poets seriously. After the Revolution, poets, like all other literary men, were assigned the job of spreading the official Communist Party line. Those who conformed were well-rewarded; others, who could not or would not write poetry to order — men like Osip Mandelstam, who died in detention, and Boris Pasternak, Nobel-Prize-winning author of Dr. Zhivago — simply stopped publishing original work under Stalin.

With the death of the old dictator in 1953 came a gradual thaw in the official freeze of Soviet thinking and writing. New, loud, and relatively bold voices of criticism were heard in the land. One of the loudest, boldest, and most popular has belonged to Siberian-born Yevgeny Yevtushenko, who, suddenly, in September, 1961, was catapulted to world fame.

For the publication of his Babi-Yar in the Moscow Literary Gazette was the first public admission of Soviet anti-Semitism in that country. It created a tremendous stir at home and abroad, and was quickly translated.

Babi-Yar is an indignant outcry against Russian indifference to Jewish suffering and persecution. Twenty years before, the Nazis had killed or buried alive tens of thousands of Russian Jews in a ravine called Babi-Yar, near Kiev, in the Ukraine. This catastrophe, Yevtushenko charges, had been glossed over because the victims were Jews.

"There are no memorials at Babi-Yar.

The steep slope is the only gravestone, I am afraid."

But Yevtushenko refuses to accept the general indifference to the fate of Russian Jewry. He thinks of it as a repudiation of the authentic Russian tradition of internationalism. As for himself:

"Today I am as old as the Jewish people
It seems to me now that I am a Jew . . .
I am every old man who was shot here.
I am every boy who was shot here.
Let no part of me forget any of this.
Let the Internationale ring out
When the last anti-Semite on earth is buried.
I have no Jewish blood,
But I am hated as a Jew by every anti-Semite.
And that is why
I am a true Russian."

The young Russians greeted Babi-Yar with excited enthusiasm. Large audiences gathered to hear Yevtushenko read it. At the conclusion of one reading, the entire audience arose and stood, head bowed, in silent memorial to Babi-Yar. For some forty years the Soviet government has been claiming that it has effectively solved "the Jewish question." Western students of Russian affairs knew otherwise. Particularly since the Forties, it was pretty clear that anti-Semitism had been revived in the land of Socialism. First there was the suspension of all Jewish cultural activities; then the execution of Yiddish writers; then the sinister "Doctor's Plot," fabricated soon before Stalin's death, and one month afterward disavowed by the Soviet press. But the reception given Babi-Yar in Russia showed that some liberal Russians themselves were aware of, and highly disturbed by, the rampant Jew-baiting in the country.

Babi-Yar and its iconoclastic author did not go unchallenged in the Soviet Union. Both were sharply attacked by the old Party bureaucracy and the staunch supporters of the Stalinist "socialist realism school," with its insistence on Communist-line writing.

Dmitri Starikov, an influential Soviet critic, took Yevtushenko to task for his "illiterate and thoughtless words" and his "nationalistic" (that is, pro-Jewish) view of the Nazi persecutions. There had been no specifically Jewish "catastrophe," Starikov insisted, and Yevtushenko was flogging the dead horse of the "Jewish question." In support of which Starikov quoted from the war writings of Ilya Ehrenburg, an influential Russian Jewish writer who had managed to follow the official Soviet line in all its tortuous meanderings for some thirty years.

But times had changed, and Ehrenburg with them. In October, 1961, the Literary Gazette printed a letter from Ehrenburg protesting Starikov's interpretation of his war-time writings, and suggesting that Starikov had misquoted him.

It now looks as though the thaw is freezing over. Khrushchev himself has called for a general retreat back to the safety of government control of all Soviet creativity, as part of a campaign for "the great ideals of Soviet literature and art." The Russian leaders are clearly taken aback by the younger Soviet artists' questioning of the fundamental ideas of their Communist fathers. They are afraid of a dangerous ideological schism. To forestall this, Khrushchev has been laying down the new-old line at meetings with the Soviet intelligentsia. He has told them just what the government and party will tolerate.

One thing that they will not tolerate, Khrushchev has made

Ultra Right-Wing Groups Require Vigilant Scrutiny

Ultra right-wing groups continue to require vigilant scrutiny by responsible community organizations based on a report showing continued widespread activities of these extremist organizations. A report on right-wing organizations covering thirty-two major American cities was presented to delegates of the National Community Relations Advisory Council at its annual meeting at the Shelburne Hotel, in Atlantic City, N.J.

The summary and analysis was prepared by Will Maslow, executive director of the American Jewish Congress, who stated that, "The radical right should be the object of continued concern to Jews and other groups in America."

The NCRAC comprises one of the largest Jewish representative bodies in the U.S., composed of sixty-nine Jewish community councils and six national Jewish secular and religious agencies. The national organizations include the three branches of Judaism: Orthodox, Conservative, and Reform.

Although showing a variety of renewed community activities by right-wing groups, the survey indicates a shift in emphasis from national issues to community programs and state operations. At the same time the findings note that these extremist groups have been more widely repudiated by responsible local and national spokesmen in recent months and that there is no evidence of any coalition among them, or that they constitute a major political force in America.

Another important conclusion reached by the survey showed that the most fertile areas of operation were in cities where right-wing groups received generous coverage from newspapers, radio, and television. The report showed that those newspapers whose editorial policy was considered conservative were most eager to report on the local activities of these groups.

"Right-wing activity goes up or down, depending on news developments", the survey reports in Los Angeles; in Orlando "newspapers not only give right-wing groups good coverage, but commend them for their patriotism"; in Indianapolis "the newspapers are fantastically conservative and applaud the extremist groups"; or in Charleston, S.C., where "the local press is strongly sympathetic to ultra right-wing causes".

In his findings, Mr. Maslow stated: "The John Birch Society and similar organizations remain a potential menace to our basic democratic freedoms. They must be carefully watched, especially on the local scene. The John Birch Society is a hundred-fold more menacing than the fanatical rantings of a George Lincoln Rockwell. The best way in which Jewish organizations could defeat the increased activity on the local scene would be to join forces with like-minded allies in the community and defend the very causes and individuals being attacked by these groups.

"When they try to suppress a particular book in the library, or vilify the work of the United Nations, we must make certain that we counter these slanderous diatribes. The worst thing that we can do in our attitude towards ultra right-wing groups is to show apathy", he concluded.

The report showed that the greatest increase of ultra right-wing activity was evident in Los Angeles, and San Diego, Cal.; Orlando, Florida; Kansas City, and St. Louis, Missouri; and Philadelphia, Pa. It was also shown that the strength of these organizations has been maintained in such cities as Tulsa, Oklahoma; Columbus, and Cincinnati, Ohio; and Houston, Texas. These cities are regarded as deeply conservative in political orientation.

The types of programs engaged in by the ultra right-wing groups covered such areas as: removal of books from library shelves, or from college textbook lists; opening of bookstores selling conservative pamphlets and literature in downtown areas or on college campuses; protest activities against sale of goods made in Communist countries; distribution of their periodicals in shopping centers.

In addition, these groups try to infiltrate local political organizations, such as in California, where the Birchites acquired control of the Young Republican Group; infiltration into school boards or parent-teacher Associations; protest against speakers or performers from nations behind the Iron Curtain; campaigns against local fluoridation programs. Groups that were cited as still being the most active included: the John Birch Society; the Christian Anti-Communism Crusade; Rev. Billy Hargis's Christian Crusade. Still extremely active as a speaker was General Edwin Gerald Walker.

clear, is too much attention to the Jewish situation in the Soviet Union. Take Babi-Yar, for instance. It has been criticized, Khrushchev said, because "the poem makes it seem as if only Jews were the victims of Fascist atrocities . . ." And then turning directly to Yevtushenko, Khrushchev charged him with aligning himself with Russia's enemies and lying about anti-Semitism:

"For whom and for what purpose has it been necessary to present things as though someone is discriminating against the Jews in our country? It is not true. Since the October Revolution, Jews have enjoyed equal rights with the other people of the Soviet Union in all respects. There is no Jewish question in our country, and those who invent one are slavishly repeating what other people say."

Khrushchev went on to criticize Ehrenburg for not painting a "correct" picture of the Soviet Union in his novel, "The Thaw," and for many "inaccuracies" statements in his book of memoirs, "Men, Years, Life."

Last year, under tremendous pressure, Yevtushenko rewrote a few lines of Babi-Yar to satisfy official criticism, and the Soviet composer Dmitri Shostakovich used the poem in his Thirteenth Symphony. But even the revised version has been constantly assailed in official Soviet circles.

But Yevtushenko has so far stuck to his guns. He has been bolstered by the fact that the attack on Soviet anti-Semitism is part of a larger reappraisal of the defects of Soviet society. He is one of a number of writers, some about his age (thirty), some older, who have begun where Khrushchev left off in 1956 when he revealed at the Communist Party's Twentieth Congress some of the crimes perpetrated under Stalin. "One Day in the Life of Ivan Denisovich," Alexander Solzhenitsyn's autobiographical account of horrors in a Soviet concentration camp, has been a best-seller in Russia.

So Yevtushenko has not been fazed by the personal attacks on him. First he went on to publish in "Pravda," "Stalin's Heirs," a biting poem about the hypocritical crypto-Stalinists who publicly attack Stalin but secretly "grieve for the good old days alone at night." Stalinism is coming back, Yevtushenko warns — and the government should take strong measures.

Most recently, in March of this year, Yevtushenko went even further. Apparently without consulting Soviet authorities, he published a candid autobiography in the Parisian newspaper, "L'Express." After describing his disenchantment with Stalin as the tyrannical leader of the Soviet experiment, Yevtushenko had some drastic things to say about the Stalinist version of Communism as well: "Stalinism is a theory which considers men to be simple mechanical wheels of a great industrial enterprise. Applied to life, this theory has produced the most horrifying results." (We might apply this description to Communism as a whole.)

The fate of the Jews in the Soviet Union, Yevtushenko states in his memoirs, is very much on his mind. He returns to it time and again.

"It is foolish and even absurd to pretend that anti-Semitism is inherent in the character of the Russian people. Anti-Semitism was always and everywhere artificially implanted to serve some evil purpose." Nor was anti-Semitism restricted to the Czarist regime (as the Communist line has always insisted).

"During certain periods of Stalin's life, this disastrous policy was resurrected." Yevtushenko admits that he himself at first was taken in by the charge that Jewish doctors had plotted against Stalin's life: "The idea that it was all a simple falsehood never occurred to me."

Nor was it an anomaly in the Soviet Union for a person to be both a good Communist and an anti-Semite. For Yevtushenko the two are irreconcilable — but even one of his best friends, a twenty-four-year-old poet, educated in Soviet Russia, was paranoid on the subject of the Jews.

What had happened? Yevtushenko concludes that Soviet anti-Semitism is part of the terrible effects of Stalinism. To him, Stalin's worst crime was not the terror of his police state, nor even the extermination of his victims. The most frightful consequence of the system has been the gradual and total decomposition of "the human soul." True, Stalin had not publicly justified or advocated anti-Semitism, but his policies "aroused and encouraged" it.

The publication of Yevtushenko's memoirs in "L'Express" has done him no good in the Soviet Union. There have been repeated "popular" demands for him to recant publicly; he has been threatened with being thrown out of the Union of Soviet Writers. But so far, neither Yevtushenko, nor Ehrenburg, have beaten their breasts in the classic Communist "mea culpa." How far Khrushchev is prepared to go in bearing down on Soviet intellectuals and pulling them back into line no one knows. But one thing is becoming clearer every day: The Soviet creative people are taking de-Stalinization seriously, and are fighting determinedly to keep the relative liberty they have won in the last ten years.

Education In Israel Equals Security In Importance, Says Eliath

Eliahu Eliath, president of the Hebrew University of Jerusalem, declared in New York that only education in Israel is equal in importance to security. He spoke at a reception given in his honor by the American Friends of the Hebrew University at University House, national offices, 11 East 69th Street. "While the army protects Israel against foreign aggression, education makes a united nation of the many tribes of which Israel's society is composed," Mr. Eliath stated at the gathering of community leaders and heads of various American Jewish organizations. Lionel R. Bauman of New York, acting president of the American Friends, presided.

Mr. Eliath pointed out that the Hebrew University of Jerusalem, "the oldest and largest institution of higher learning and research in the country, plays a major role in training teachers, physicians, agriculturists, lawyers, civil servants, chemists, and other experts in practically every field of Israel's life. Its 8,000 students and teaching staff of more than 1,100 constitute the center of Israel's cultural and intellectual life, and the student body contains the future leadership of Israel's social, economic, and political life.

"The Hebrew University also plays a major role in cementing Israel's relations with the Jewish communities abroad. The 450 Jewish students, mainly from the United States, who are spending one or two years at the University, return to their respective countries with greater and more comprehensive knowledge of Israel's life and her problems, and are able to contribute to closer ties between their communities and Israel. While in Israel they enlarge the knowledge and understanding of Israel's youth on the conditions and problems of the Diaspora.

"The University is looking forward to enlarging its ability to receive more students from abroad if and when more material assistance will be coming from its Friends abroad, thus making possible the enlargement of opportunities for building more hostels and other urgently required facilities both for Israeli students, and those coming from other lands, including the growing number of students from newly emergent Asian and African states," Mr. Eliath said.

Mr. Eliath paid tribute to the American Friends of the Hebrew University for their work on behalf of the University. He conferred an honorary fellowship of the Hebrew University on Sundel Doniger, of New York, a vice president and long-time leader of the American Friends. A parchment scroll presented to Mr. Doniger by Mr. Eliath stated: "In order to give due recognition for conspicuous services to the Hebrew University, the University has instituted the title of Honorary Fellow to be bestowed on those whom the University desires to honor. The executive council of the board of governors has resolved to confer the title of Honorary Fellow on Sundel Doniger."

Leaders of the Women's League for Israel, which is raising $500,000 for the Student Center now under construction on the central campus of the Hebrew University, presented a $50,000 check to Mr. Eliath for the project. The presentation was made by Mrs. Jack Starr, president, and Mrs. William Prince, honorary president of the women's organization. With its latest gift, the Women's League for Israel has transmitted $250,000 to the Hebrew University for the Student Center, which will consist of student activities, athletics, and student organization buildings.

In presenting Mr. Eliath to the gathering, Mr. Bauman referred to the fact that the will of the late president of Israel, Itzhak Ben-Zvi, requested that his friend, Eliahu Eliath, head the Ben-Zvi Institute for Research of Jewish Communities in the Middle East, which is at the Hebrew University. Mr. Ben-Zvi had founded the Institute and headed it from its inception. "To bequeath the leadership of this beloved Institute to Mr. Eliath was not only a mark of friendship, but of Mr. Ben-Zvi's absolute confidence that the exacting standards which he himself established would be maintained. All of us who have come to know and value Eliahu Eliath's extraordinary gifts will readily understand and heartily endorse that expression of confidence," Mr. Bauman stated.

Mr. Eliath was elected president of the Hebrew University in March, 1963. He was Israel's first ambassador to the United States, serving from 1948 to 1950, when he was named ambassador to Great Britain. He represented Israel at the Court of St. James's for almost a decade. He is a graduate of the University which he now heads, and is an authority on the social and economic problems of the Middle East. During his current brief visit to the United States, Mr. Eliath received honorary degrees from the Hebrew Union College-Jewish Institute of Religion in Cincinnati, Ohio; and from Brandeis University in Waltham, Mass.

Meanwhile, Yevtushenko's projected visit to the United States was called off when he published his memoirs. He had been scheduled to read his poetry in New York's YMHA poetry center, among other plans. Nobody can predict when he will again be in a position to speak directly to a Western audience, to tell even the limited truth about the Soviet Union — and its brand of anti-Semitism.

I remember this wine!

Mazel Tov is a wine that will unlock memories. It tastes like the wine you used to sip many years ago at your parents' table.

Mazel Tov tastes like that because it is made like those wines were made. It is made only from Concord grapes grown on the sunny slopes of the Niagara Peninsula. It is a hearty, richly honest wine. A wine that is as natural with a shabbat meal as the chalah, as welcome at a simcha as a handshake.

Although Mazel Tov is made strictly "Kosher l'Pesach", it is available all year 'round.
